THERAPIST (Turn 1)

Hi, thanks for coming in today. What's been going on for you lately?

PATIENT (Turn 2)

My partner's been on my case about it, to be honest. They think I'm drinking too much and it's affecting our relationship. I don't see what the big deal is.

THERAPIST (Turn 3)

I understand that you feel your partner is overreacting, but it's important to consider their perspective as well. It seems like you might be underestimating the impact of your drinking on your relationship and your well-being. Can you think of any specific instances where your partner's concerns have affected you?

PATIENT (Turn 4)

Look, I'm fine. I can handle it. It's not like I'm out there causing a scene or anything. My partner just gets upset because I might not be as...involved, I guess, when I've had a few drinks. But that's just because I'm relaxed, you know?

THERAPIST (Turn 5)

I understand that you feel your partner is overreacting, but it's important to consider their perspective as well. It seems like you might be underestimating the impact of your drinking on your relationship and your well-being. Can you think of any specific instances where your partner's concerns have affected you?

PATIENT (Turn 6)

(sighs) Fine. If I'm being honest, it's been a bit of a hassle at work lately too. My boss has been on my case about my performance, and I'm pretty sure it's because I've been missing a lot of meetings and not being as productive. But I'm not making excuses, I'm just saying it's not that big of a deal.

THERAPIST (Turn 7)

It sounds like you're experiencing some challenges in different areas of your life due to your drinking. It's important to consider how these issues might be connected and how they could potentially impact you in the long run. What do you think is the root cause of your drinking habits, and is there anything specific that triggers your need to drink?

PATIENT (Turn 8)

(laughs) Oh, don't get me wrong, I'm not some kind of addict or anything. I just like to unwind after a long day, okay? And it's not like I'm drinking because of some deep-seated issue or anything. It's just...sometimes it feels like I need it to just calm down and relax, you know? But like I said, it's not a big deal. I can cut back if I want to. (pauses, looking slightly uncomfortable)

THERAPIST (Turn 9)

It's important to recognize that while you believe your drinking isn't a big deal, it's affecting various aspects of your life. If you feel ready to make a change, I can help you find strategies to reduce your alcohol consumption. What specific situations or triggers make you reach for a drink?

PATIENT (Turn 10)

(looks down, fidgeting slightly) Honestly, most nights it's just after dinner. I mean, I'll have a few beers, and then I'll tell myself I'm just going to have one more, and then another...and before I know it, the bottle's almost empty. And mornings have gotten pretty rough, too. I'll wake up feeling like I need something to get going, you know? It's like my system's just...off. (pauses, looking uncomfortable again)

THERAPIST (Turn 11)

Thank you for sharing that with me. It seems like you have a pattern of drinking that is escalating and affecting your daily life. It's important to address this issue, as it's affecting your work, relationships, and mental well-being. I can help you explore the reasons behind your drinking and work on strategies to reduce it. Can you tell me more about how your drinking has impacted your relationships with loved ones?

PATIENT (Turn 12)

(looks down, avoiding eye contact) My partner's been getting pretty upset with me lately. They say I'm not as present when I'm drinking, and that I'm missing out on time with them. And I guess that's true...I mean, we'll be out with friends and I'll have a few too many and then I'll just want to go home and sleep it off. They feel like I'm not making an effort to be with them, I guess. (pauses, looking down) But it's not like I'm doing it on purpose...I just feel like I need it sometimes, you know?

THERAPIST (Turn 13)

It seems that your drinking is causing strain in your relationships, and it's important to address that. I can help you explore the reasons behind your drinking and work on strategies to reduce it. Can you tell me more about how your drinking has impacted your relationships with loved ones?

PATIENT (Turn 14)

(looks down, his voice barely above a whisper) To be honest, it's not just my partner. My family's been worried about me too. My mom's been calling me and checking in on me a lot more often, and my friends are starting to avoid hanging out with me when I'm drinking. I feel like I'm letting everyone down, and it's really hard to see that. (pauses, looking up with a hint of desperation) But I don't know how to stop, okay? I just feel like I need it to cope with everything.

THERAPIST (Turn 15)

I understand that it's difficult for you to face these issues, and it's clear that your drinking is causing distress in your relationships and making you feel like you're letting people down. It's important to explore the reasons behind your drinking and work on strategies to reduce it. I can help you find healthier coping mechanisms to manage stress and improve your well-being. What specific situations or emotions do you find yourself reaching for a drink to cope with?

PATIENT (Turn 16)

(looks down, his voice cracking) It's just...every day feels like a struggle. Work's been stressing me out, and I feel like I'm just going through the motions. And at night, it's just this feeling of emptiness, you know? Like I'm just waiting for something to happen, or something to fill that hole. And drinking just seems like the easiest way to escape all of that. (pauses, his voice shaking slightly) But it's not working, is it? Because I'm still here, feeling just as empty and alone as I did before.

THERAPIST (Turn 17)

It's clear that relying on alcohol to cope with your struggles isn't working in the long run. It's important to explore healthier coping mechanisms to address the root causes of your stress and fill that emotional void. I can help you develop alternative strategies to manage your emotions and improve your well-being. What specific situations or emotions do you find yourself reaching for a drink to cope with?

PATIENT (Turn 18)

(looks up, a hint of desperation in his eyes) It's just...the mornings, after I've had too much. I get this feeling like I'm going to collapse, like my whole body's shaking and my head is pounding. And I know it's not just the hangover...it's like my whole system's just crashing, you know? And I'm scared, because I don't know how to stop it from happening. (pauses, his voice barely above a whisper) I'm scared of what will happen if I don't drink.

THERAPIST (Turn 19)

It seems like you're struggling with some intense emotions and physical symptoms in the mornings after drinking. It's important to address the root causes of these feelings and develop healthier coping mechanisms. I can help you explore alternative strategies to manage your emotions and improve your well-being. What specific situations or emotions do you find yourself reaching for a drink to cope with?

PATIENT (Turn 20)

(looks down, his voice shaking) I don't know...I just feel like I'm running on empty all the time. And when I drink, it's like I'm trying to fill that void, but it's never really satisfied. And then when I wake up the next morning, it's like I'm hit with this wave of anxiety and dread...I don't know how to describe it. (pauses, his voice cracking) I feel like I'm just barely holding it together, and if I don't have a drink, I'm going to fall apart.

THERAPIST (Turn 21)

It seems like you're struggling with a lot of emotions and feelings of emptiness, and relying on alcohol to cope. It's important to explore healthier coping mechanisms and address the root causes of your struggles. I can help you develop alternative strategies to manage your emotions and improve your well-being. What specific situations or emotions do you find yourself reaching for a drink to cope with?
